SHALL WE SELL THEM?

There is in Philadelphia a clothing house which has no double in all the world. The world is full of clothing houses; and it is a good deal to say that one is unlike all the rest.

First, in its dealing; and it is surprising that one house should differ much from another. Selling clothing is so simple a matter, that it is likely, one would suppose, to be done in very much the same way in Philadelphia, New York and London. But Philadelphia is ahead; and, curiously enough, one house in Philadelphia is ahead of all the rest.

To be ahead in dealing is to deal on a higher plane, in a more liberal way, to give the buyer more well founded confidence without loss of the merchant's safety. This Philadelphia clothing house says to a stranger: "We want to deal with exact justice. We want what belongs to you, viz., a fair profit; and we want you to have what belongs to you, viz., a liberal money's worth. Our way to arrive at this result is to mark a price on everything we sell, which price is absolute; and to let you buy what you like, go away and think the bargain over, and come and trade back, if you want to. We find by experience that this liberality is harmless to us. Of course, you like it. And it makes quick and ready dealing. We don't want you to bring back what you buy—it would cost us money every time; but we would rather you would bring back than keep, what you don't like. So, we try to see that you get at first what you will like the better the more you know of it. This is really the whole philosophy of our dealings." Is it any wonder that no other clothing house in this city, or New York, or London, deals in the same way?

Second, in its goods—the amount and variety of them. There are other houses where excellent clothing is kept, and a great deal of it; but there is none, anywhere, that keeps so much. The dealing related above has won the largest trade the world has yet seen. To supply such a trade great quantity and variety of clothing are required; and these in turn increase the trade, because everybody likes to choose out of many things, rather than out of few.

This is the country of ready-made clothing. Great Britain makes the most of any European country; but there is not in all London any clothing business a quarter as large as that of Oak Hall. New York has several large clothing businesses; but no one nearly equal to that of Oak Hall; Boston likewise.

Look back twenty years! Have we done you good service, or not? But that is not what we had in mind; we were thinking of the clothes you are going to buy to-day. Shall we sell them?

MARYLAND DUCK SHOOTING.

JUDGE GILDERSLEEVE'S EXPERIENCE ON THE SUSQUEHANNA FLATS.

Two Days Fine Sport from the Batteries of Capt. George Fourtman—Dressed Canvas Backs and Red Heads Killed.

New York Sun.
Judge Gildersleeve, who is perhaps even better known as a rifle shot and sportsman than a jurist, has done recently some good shooting on the water of Chesapeake bay, where yearly immense numbers of wild fowl congregate. Sitting in his office the judge described it.

"There is no better place for duck shooting," he said, "than the Susquehanna flats, near Havre de Grace, on the upper waters of the Chesapeake bay. There the wild celery grows in abundance. This is the favorite food of the canvas back ducks, and it imparts a delightful flavor to their flesh. Consequently the canvas backs of that region are the best. So, too, are the red heads that abound in the locality. These birds bring a higher price in the market than those shot in any other place that I know of. Now, as you probably know very well, duck shooting in Maryland is strictly protected by law, which provides that no shooting shall take place in the fall until Nov. 1. Then it begins, but it is confined to Saturdays, Wednesdays and Fridays. The man that shoots on other days is more than likely to be arrested, for the game constables are numerous and on the alert to capture those who have the temerity to break the game laws of the sovereign State of Maryland. The shooting at first is restricted to the days that I have named in order that the wild fowl may not become too wild. On shooting days a pretty general cannonading is kept up and they become thoroughly frightened. A day's shooting in November is causing them to forget what frightened them. After Jan. 1 the shooting is extended to Saturdays. But this added day doesn't amount to much usually, for by the holidays the flats are generally frozen over, and the duck shooting for the season comes to an end.

"And now a word about the modus operandi," the judge continued. "The best way to shoot ducks on the flats then is from a box or a battery as it is called. This is simply a coffin-shaped water-tight box, so constructed that the hunter gets in his side and is nearly level with the surface of the water. On each side is a canvas-covered frame-work called a wing. These wings extend out over the water, and are intended to keep the waves from washing into the battery. When, however, there is a stiff wind blowing they do not infrequently prove insufficient to keep the water out of the box. Then a strip of sheet iron four or six inches wide which is attached to the box is turned up, and it proves a sufficient barrier. In this box lies the hunter with his gun in hands. Near him are placed the decoy ducks. Very often these boxes are placed in pairs, and two hunters occupy them. The laws of the state further demand that for each battery a license of $25 shall be paid. There is also another license for $10 issued to what are called 'bushwackers.' These are the men too poor to own a battery and outfit, and cruise around the flats and kill what they can. The first week in November is the most desirable for shooting, as you can readily see, for then the birds are tamest and most plentiful, and then of course the batteries bring the highest prices. The first Monday morning in November found our party, which consisted of Colonel E. Harrison Sanford, R. R. Haines, Arthur T. Sullivan, and myself, sleeping soundly on the scow of Capt. George R. Carver, one of the best known and most successful duck hunters of Maryland. Capt. Carver has one of the most complete outfits in that section. It consists of a scow, batteries, decoys and small boats. The scow is a large flat-bottomed, schooner-rigged craft, drawing little water. Forward is a kitchen complete and aft is the cabin or dining saloon. There are comfortable banks, and everything is ship-shape and right snug. The scow lay all night outside the lines. There are lines prescribed by law inside of which the scows and boats cannot go until after 3 o'clock on shooting days. Of course, on dark, stormy mornings some daring skipper will run in; but it is risky business. But at 3 o'clock the scows, many of which are lying all along the lines, hoist sail and make for the grounds. They choose the most likely spots, get in one another, anchor as not to touch with one another, anchor the batteries and put out the decoys. At about 5 o'clock the sportsmen are called, breakfast is served, and as soon as it is light enough to see they are rowed out to the batteries, where they take their places and wait for the ducks.

"On that Monday morning we used a double battery, and two of us took our places. Around us were 450 decoy red head and canvas back ducks. They were made of iron, and looked very natural. When we were in our places the men rowed back, the scow was anchored off a good distance, and we waited. The morning dawned beautiful and clear. Soon we began to hear the popping of guns all around us, and very soon ducks came our way and as not to be taken by surprise, they were taken by surprise. The sun shone warmly, and there was just breeze enough to make the ducks fly. A battery is always placed so that the shooter lies with his head to windward and feet to leeward. Ducks, when possible, fly up in the face of the wind when about to light. If a duck is flying right with the wind and decides to light, it makes a curve, swoops around, and comes up sharp in the wind; so that a good duck-shooting day should be rather windy. There we lay in our coffins, surrounded by decoys, and every few minutes we'd see over us, or to our right or left, a flock of ducks swooping around to join our decoys, which danced on the little waves in a very lifelike way. The time to shoot is just as the birds are about to light. Under favorable circumstances they come within fifteen or twenty yards. Then is the time to sit up in the box and bang away. New beginners make the mistake usually of firing at the flock, not at single birds. The result is poor execution. You must select your bird and kill him, and then go for another. Col. Sanford and I tried the experiment several times of blazing away at the flock, but we usually missed all. This year, for the first time, I tried the experiment of using two guns, and succeeded several times in getting three birds, one with each barrel of my first gun, and the third with the first barrel of my second gun. This requires quick work. Sometimes we got two birds with one barrel when they lapped each other as they flew."

"What sort of guns do you use?"
"Usually I have shot with a 10-bore Scott gun, 10½ pounds weight, using 4½ drachms of powder and 1½ ounces of No. 4 shot. But this year I used for my first gun a 12-bore gun, weighing 7½ pounds, using 3½ drachms of powder and 1½ ounces No. 6 shot. Why the change? For several reasons. Early in the season the birds are tamer, and come within easy range. Consequently they can be killed with a lighter charge; then the lighter gun does not make so much noise, and so does not frighten the birds so much; and then the recoil from the light gun and light charges is much less, and that something to be considered, I assure you. Shoot all day from a battery and you'll find yourself well shaken up at its close with a raging headache, and probably a bruised shoulder and aching fingers.

"We should all day Monday, taking turns. After two of us had shot, say half an hour or an hour, the small boats would come out from the scow with the other two of our party, pick up the dead birds, and take us back to the scow. The close of the day found us with 213 ducks, mostly red heads. Besides we had at least 40 stolen by the bushwackers. Many of the dead ducks drift out some distance before the boats go after them, and this gives the bushwackers an opportunity to steal them. The weather wasn't good for canvas backs. They are rough weather birds, and though we saw many flocks of them flying high, very few came to our decoys. On Tuesday we rested. The law made us, and we were glad to. We stayed in the scow at dusk and had a good time. On Wednesday we went at it again. The weather was not favorable. There was no breeze, and so our decoys didn't work well, and the ducks didn't fly well. But we boxed 160, of which 13 were canvas backs. Our two days' sport gave us 400 birds, not counting some 'grasers' or 'butter balls' as they are called, a little fat, dainty duck that flies low and fast, pays no attention to decoys, and can only be got by chance."

"What were your share of the spoils?"
"I was lucky. I killed 100 on the first day. The best day's shooting I ever did, and half that number on Wednesday. 'Is the trip expensive?'
"No. We take the train here at 4 in the afternoon for Havre de Grace, get there at 8:15 in the evening, get right aboard the sloop, for all arrangements have been made, do our shooting and get back here Thursday morning. For the use of the batteries we paid $150. That included everything, except about $1 for provisions and a sufficient number of decoys. Besides among four makes them quite reasonable. We could have paid all our expenses with the ducks we shot, and has something over. The first part of the season the best batteries bring $30 a day. That's what we paid. Later they come down to $40, but rarely less than that, for the owners can make that usually by shooting ducks for the market. I consider the time and money well spent, for it is rare sport."

Game Dinner.

A Great Chicago Feud.
The famous host of the Old Tremont, and more recently of the Grand Pacific Hotel, Chicago, has just given his twenty-fifth annual game dinner, and the bill of fare is a wonderful exhibit of the capabilities of the Chicago markets. Mr. Drake's guests, this year, were required to discuss the following:

Blue Point oysters in shell.
Soup—Game, venison broth.
Fish—Black bass, brook trout.
Animals—Loin of buffalo, saddle of black-tail deer, leg of elk, saddle of moun-

Cheese, biscuit, coffee.

A Wayne County Dancin' Battle with a Buck.

Five or six miles back of Equinunk, Wayne county, Pa., in a cozy little cabin, in the midst of a large forest, lives Henry Merrill with his daughter Clara, aged eighteen. Clara can row, trap and shoot as well as any man in Wayne county. A few days ago she started to cross a large inland lake near her home in a light skiff, carrying, as is her custom, a small rifle slung across her shoulder. She was paddling leisurely along, and when nearly half-way across she discovered a short distance making a head wind. She which a nearer approach proved to be a large five-pronged buck that had been driven into the water by dogs. She immediately loaded her rifle and taking careful aim fired. The ball passed through the buck's neck, making a bad wound. The animal, enraged by the pain, struck at the boat with one of its forests, completely shattering the frail bark and hurling Merrill into the water. But she was plucky and could swim as well as she could shoot. As the buck swam towards her, she grasped him by the horns, and drawing her hunting knife from her belt, she dealt the animal a terrible blow in the neck, killing him almost instantly. She screamed, of course, and as no help arrived she swam to the shore, about an eighth of a mile, and hurried home. She put on dry clothes, and after procuring another boat, rowed out to where her prize was floating and towed it to shore. When dressed the animal weighed nearly 300 pounds. This is the eighteenth deer Miss Merrill has killed, and she feels justly proud of her last adventure. She will have the buck's head stuffed as a memento of her struggle for life in the water.

Alive at 102.

A Most Remarkable Family—The Largest Man in America.
Lewis Rockwell, aged 102 years, lives in a rickety old house in Pike county, not far from Honesdale. He is the eldest of a family remarkable for the longevity of its members. Of the Rockwell family there are eight brothers and sisters yet living. They are: Lewis Rockwell, aged 102; Abraham Rockwell, 95; Mrs. Anna Wells, 83; Miss Sallie Rockwell, 79; Eliza Rockwell, 77; Mrs. Phoebe Gainsford, 75; Mrs. Katherine Brown, 73, and Mrs. Lucinda Valentine, 70. The aggregate age of this family is 643 years, or an average of over 80 years each. In spite of the fact that he has many wealthy relations old Lewis Rockwell has been thrown upon the town and is now nearly the only "town charge" in the county. Lewis Cornelius, who died some years ago, was a connection of the Rockwell family. He was at one time the largest man in America, being considerably larger than the celebrated Daniel Lambert, Barnum's giant. Mr. Cornelius's dimensions are entered upon the record books in the prothonotary's office at Milford, Pike county, as follows:

"Lewis Cornelius—Born 1791.
"Height, 6 feet.
"Circumference below waist, 8 feet 2 inches.
"Circumference above waist, 6 feet 2½ inches.
"Circumference of arm above elbow, 2 feet 2 inches.
"Circumference of arm below elbow, 1 foot 6 inches.
"Circumference of wrist, 1 foot 3 inches.
"Circumference of thigh, 4 feet 2 inches.
"Circumference of calf of leg, 2 feet 7 inches.
"Circumference of ankle, 1 foot 7 inches.
"Weight, without any clothing whatever, 645 pounds."

This is the only authentic record of Mr. Cornelius's size extant. As he had been sick some time, he lost over 50 pounds of his weight. He was not weighed until after his death, and when in full health would have tipped the scales at 700 pounds. His wife was a very slight woman, and weight just 100 pounds. They had three sons, whose weight was 115 pounds, an average of 272 pounds each. The only surviving son, John Cornelius, now weighs 300 pounds.

The Giraffe.

The tallest of all earthly dwellers, the Giraffe erect its stately head far above any animal that walks the face of the globe. It is an inhabitant of various parts of Africa, and is evidently a unique being, comprising in itself an entire tribe. The height of a full-grown Giraffe is from eighteen to twenty feet. The greatest part of this enormous stature is obtained by the extraordinarily long neck. It feeds upon the leaves of trees. It is a gentle and playful animal, readily attaching itself to its companions, or its keepers.

As far as is at present known, the Giraffe is a silent animal, like the Eland and the Kanguara, and has never been heard to utter a sound, even when struggling in the agonies of death.—Wood's Ill. Nat. History, vol. 1, p. 84.
